Business, Finance and International Development

Series Editors: Catherine Dolan, SOAS, University of London, UK, Paul Gilbert, University of Sussex, UK, Lena Lavinás, The Federal University of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, Emma Mawdsley, University of Cambridge, UK, Dinah Rajak, University of Sussex, UK, Farwa Sial, Eurodad and University of Manchester, UK, Jessica Sklair, University of Cambridge, UK

We are delighted to announce the launch of a new series dedicated to interdisciplinary work on business, finance and international development.

Drawing on cross-cutting conversations in the disciplines of anthropology, critical management studies, development studies, economics, geography and socio-legal studies, this series will be an arena for critical scholarly engagements with topics such as:

- the form that new public-private 'state-market hybrids' take in contemporary international development;
- the role that private sector entities play in producing and legitimating knowledge in/of development;
- the impact of emerging financial architectures and innovations on the Global South;
- labour and human rights issues in global supply chains;
- the place of business and finance in resource extraction and conservation;
- methodological and ethical issues in the study of these themes.

As private sector actors become increasingly central to the design and delivery of international development, this series provides the first specialized, interdisciplinary publishing outlet for critical work on business, finance and international development.

The series also makes an explicit commitment to addressing issues around race and colonial legacies in development studies, and to amplifying scholarly work from the Global South through both solicited submissions and authors' citation practices.
